

On Sovereign Deed
Dale I. Giddings
October 19, 2007

To the editor:

If you like the concept of gated communities, where the rich live protected by their own private security personnel, and if you like a health care system that only the rich can afford, and if you like having elite private schools where the children of the rich have the best teachers and facilities while public schools suffer with chronic budget problems, then you'll love Sovereign Deed (a kind of FEMA for the rich). And you would probably like living in a dysfunctional country like Columbia or Guatemala where the rich elite have all the power and privileges.

Let's not let our desperation for jobs blind us to what Sovereign Deed represents, mainly a further separation of the rich from the rest of us. Remember, united we stand, divided we fall.